Gov. Cox Issues Drought Emergency Order

In April, Utah Governor Spencer J. Cox declared a state of emergency due to the drought conditions throughout the state.

In this order, Gov. Cox asked all Utahns, “households, farmers, businessmen, governments, and other groups, to carefully consider their needs and reduce their water use. We saved billions of gallons last year and we can do it again.”

As of April, over 99% of the state was in severe drought and more than 43% in extreme drought. With the state’s population expected to double in the next 10 years, this is expected to be an ongoing challenge and a reason to permanently change longstanding water use practices.

#Wait2Water: Don't use sprinklers yet!

Please do your part to conserve Utah’s precious water by waiting to turn on your lawn sprinklers. Check the Weekly Lawn Watering Guide – Conserve Water Utah for advice on best practices for a healthy, water-wise lawn. Check your sprinkler system and consider redesigning your landscape to use less water over the long term.

Visit the Conservation Garden Park virtually or in person for a multitude of free and low-cost options for conserving water while maintaining a beautiful landscape.

Utah is still in drought! Check with your local water provider for recommendations and restrictions

Is discolored tap water safe to drink?

Every spring, we receive questions, comments, and complaints from customers when their tap water develops a slight discolored tinge.

This discoloration is a normal part of the runoff process. The water is safe to drink and to use for washing clothes and dishes.

During the spring runoff, as the water flows over leaves and twigs it can develop some discoloration, similar to what happens when you put tea leaves into water. This discoloration can persist even after water is treated in our treatment plant.

Don't worry, the discoloration will go away as the snowmelt lessens in the summer.

WaterPro customers asked to reduce water use voluntarily

To help mitigate the ongoing drought, municipalities and water providers across the state have been imposing restrictions - sometimes including fines for violations - on their customers' water use.

WaterPro customers have been asking if the company or Draper City are planning to implement such restrictions.

As of this writing, WaterPro and Draper City plan to ask our water consumers for help by voluntarily cutting back on the amount of water they use. At this time, there are no mandatory restrictions or penalties in place, although that could change if the situation worsens.

How you can help

Last year we asked our customers for voluntary restrictions, and your response was positive! Again this year we are asking you to help improve our entire community's water outlook by:

- Watering your landscape only two days per week.
- Restricting watering times to 30 minutes for pop-up heads or 40 minutes for rotor heads.

We have arrived at these recommendations by considering not just the water supply, but also the needs of landscape plants. As members of the community, we want Draper to remain beautiful, all while preserving precious water for our use and for future generations. We know we can rely on our customers to help keep our community strong and healthy.
